1947 The Alabama legislature passed the Regional Vocational and Trade School Act that established the first four trade schools in the state. In September 1950, Tuscaloosa was selected as the location for the third regional trade school.

1951 A site was selected on what is now Veterans Memorial Parkway where Home Depot and Target stand. In June 1951, Harold I. James was named the head of this new school. Eleven initial courses of study were included in the curriculum.

1954 May 1954, Tuscaloosa legislator J.P. Shelton died. Shelton had been instrumental in obtaining one of the new trade schools for this area. When the State legislature met in 1955, a House Joint Resolution was passed naming the new school the J.P. Shelton Trade School.

1976 H. I. James retired and Leo Sumner became president of the school which was now named Shelton State Technical College. In 1975 Brewer State Junior College in Fayette, Alabama, located a branch campus offering academic classes in Tuscaloosa. Soon the branch had over 1000 students and was larger than the main campus. During the mid 1970s, talk began on merging this campus with Shelton State Technical College. In 1979, the Tuscaloosa Branch of Brewer State Junior College and Shelton State Technical College were joined and Shelton State Community College was born. In 1980, the Alabama Fire College became part of the college.

1988 Leo Sumner retired and Tom Umphrey was named the new president. In 1993, C.A. Fredd State Technical College was merged with Shelton State, and Umphrey was named president of the new Shelton State Community College.

1994 Ground was broken at Shelton State's new campus located in south Tuscaloosa County. The college's technical programs moved to the new campus in June 1996, and the academic and administrative areas moved in 1997. The fine arts wing and Theatre Tuscaloosa facilities were added in 1998.

2000 Tom Umphrey retired in 2000 and Rick Rogers was named president of Shelton State Community College. Today Shelton State has over 7,000 students.
